

Text and illustrations by Isabela Barboza

That bird

This little book is a big metaphor in many ways. I hope they never let their flights be arrested.

- Isabela Barboza.

The bird is in the cage.
Do they know that the bird
is there?
The little bird that kissed flowers ...
Today he can't longer love.

The bird is sad
What happened?
The princess arrested.
The princess lost.

The bird goes to the forests
And he planted new seeds
when he took flight.

Today, he cries every day
It is slowly languishing.

Why don't you remember the bird?

Where is the key?

The bird has a nest.

The bird does not have a aircraft.

The little bird liked sunflowers
He slept on them
Like the sheets
Cotton ...

But the very thin beaked
bird
Closed
He couldn't say yes or no

Why little bird?
Open the beak and escape
from the cage.
The bird was still sad.
It was there forever
Without being able to complete the nine hours.

The little bird
It passed slowly
The time
And atrophied

Not opening the nozzle
He didn't even to sing, sang.

The bird was a girl.
That someone hunted
Arrested.
She got sick.

That bird
Very expert
There was no open door
And to the world of dreams
She flew...

The end.

Isabela Barboza is an independent writer who has been writing and publishing for digital platforms for twelve years. She has two novels released on Amazon, in digital format and four novels for the Wattpad platform. Her works show a parallel and random universe that fills her, releasing all her dreams and metaphors to the world.

More information at:
isabelabarboza4.webnode.com
Instagram: @isabelabarbozad

